

Today's Quotation
Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it.
—Abraham Lincoln

President Truman's seizure of the steel mills was ruled unconstitutional by Judge David A. Pine in federal district court at Washington late yesterday.

The judge said the President acted without authority of either the Constitution or any present enactment of the Congress, and the decision declared the seizure was in fact a dictatorial seizure rather than democracy.

The judge's verdict was preceded by one of the most arrogant blunders in the history of American law. In presenting the case for seizure of the mills the government's chief attorney, Assistant Attorney General Holmes Baldridge, argued to the court last week that:

1. President Truman had "inherent powers" to seize the steel industry and protect the public welfare.

2. The Constitution limits the legislative and judicial branches—but not the executive authority.

However, after thinking over his words, baldridge issued a retraction and correction, which was published on this page yesterday, only a few hours before Judge Pine swung his legal axe. Mr. Baldridge said he did not mean to claim the President has unlimited powers, and if the court understood such a claim to have been made, he, Mr. Baldridge, desired to correct it.

Meanwhile the Republican opposition in Congress is bolting with talk of impeachment proceedings against President Truman—which talk is as irresponsible as the Democratic actions. The steel crisis is merely one detail of a larger crisis pattern not of Mr. Truman's making. Today's President has to deal with the wreckage left by his four-term predecessor and the post-war tidal wave. Regardless of the way he surrounds himself with poor advisers, and a mounting record of mistakes, his impeachment is unimaginable.

That he was talked into the steel mess by his advisers goes without saying. First the White House palace guard rigged the Wage Stabilization Board to produce an order favorable to the steel union, and then, when the mills refused to accept it, someone "sold" Mr. Truman on the idea that his "inherent powers" permitted him to cover up political maneuvering by seizing the mill properties.

All this is clearly shown by Assistant Attorney General Baldridge's unguarded statement in federal court last week—a statement which he had to retract and abandon as soon as his fellow Americans digested its full meaning.

The crux of the steel controversy is this: In war the steel mills might conceivably be taken over and operated by the government, but there would have to be specific action by the Congress, with payment to the mills' owners. The steel mills are private property. Unlike a public utility, such as a railroad or a power company, steel is an unregulated private business. And if the federal government can seize one kind of private property on a political pretext it can seize all private property.

What is the government's pretext in the steel case? It is that we are at war in Korea and the "public welfare" demands an uninterrupted flow of steel. But we are not legally at war in Korea. Congress alone has the right to declare war. And until Congress does declare war the government has no option in the steel crisis but to seize all civilian supplies of that metal and divert them to the military. The fact is the mills were seized not because of military necessity but to keep the political blunders of the steel mess from falling upon civilians.

This is a pretty good time to survey our entire position.

We are on a military excursion in Europe, on another in Korea, and possibly anywhere else that the executive branch of government chooses to fight with or without the consent of congress. All these excursions are in the name of "world democracy."

And in the name of "world democracy" President Truman was told that he had the right to seize private property here at home.

Before I would yield one dollar of private property to the politicians of the federal government, without benefit of acts of congress or specific court precedent, I would call off the whole "world democracy" crusade and get ready to defend the only democracy we are absolutely sure of—the one our ancestors gave us, the one here at home.

The real villain in this piece is not President Truman. The real villain is the CIO steel union, 600,000 shake-down artists manipulating democracy to their own benefit even though it threatens to bring down the house in which 150 million freeborn Americans live.

In 1804, Alexander Hamilton, then governor of New York, was killed in a duel at Westbury, N. Y., with Aaron Burr, then vice-president of the United States.

Nudist Is All Pinched in Legal Zipper

Detroit, April 30 (AP)—A nudist case in Federal District Court was tangled in a legal zipper today.

Counsel for defending officers being sued for false arrest by a nudist teacher cited some bare facts of procedure that may throw the damage case out of court.

Edith Church, 42, of Maumee, O., who was arrested last summer in a raid on a nudist camp near Monroe, Mich., is seeking $120,000 damages. She declared the incident caused her to lose a $4,000-a-year teaching job and that her constitutional rights were violated.

The defendants are state police, Sheriff Roy Gensler of Monroe County, and former Prosecutor Foster D. Luse of Monroe County.

Miss Church rested her case yesterday after a 71-year-old witness testified that one of the raiding officers ordered her to remove her clothes.

The plaintiff's witness, John A. Rubbel, of Belle Center, O., said Miss Church was wearing shorts and a halter when raiders swooped down on the camp in August, 1948.

One of the officers, Rubel said, "kept ordering her to take them off, take them off."

Assistant State Atty. Gen. Martin L. Leacock sprang a surprise for the defense in moving for a directed verdict in favor of the defendants.

Leacock uncovered a Michigan statute of limitations which says action can be brought against sheriff's deputies more than two years after the event. Miss Church filed her suit in February, 1951.

George F. Fisk Jr., attorney for Miss Church, said he was not aware of the section until it was brought to his attention by the motion.

"I'll give you time to study it," said Federal Judge Frank A. Picard, "but it looks to me right now that you are out of court."

Protective Group to Hold Annual Meet

The first annual convention of the Third District Livestock Protective Association will be held Thursday, May 22, according to Dale Jones, president of the association. This Livestock Association, which has been in existence about one year now, has some 65 members on the roll.

The program committee for the convention has arranged a very fine program which includes an address by Henry Bell, Executive Secretary of the Southwest Cattle Growers Association, with headquarters in Fort Worth, Texas. Dr. Gifford, University of Arkansas, and Mr. Muldrow of the Extension Service will also make talks. Dr. Herbert Rogers of Hope will appear on the program.

Committee reports, resolutions and the election of officers will immediately precede the Barbecue dinner which will be at 8:30 p. m. The convention will be held in the coliseum at the city park with registration beginning at 2 p. m.

The association is very anxious that all members attend the meeting and special invitations are being sent to cattlemen throughout the Third Livestock District.

Mr. Floyd stated that he greatly appreciated the cooperation given him and Mrs. Floyd by the fine people of Hope in the operation of the hotel and that they will always have a warm spot in their hearts for everyone in Hope. He said that they have no immediate plans for the future and would like to continue to make their home here if that is possible.

Several more wives groused about the silent treatment accorded them by husbands with a chronic habit of reading the newspaper at breakfast.

One wife said that whenever her husband laughed at something he was reading and she asked him what was funny, he just looked up with glazed eyes and said "who?"

The basic trouble in these situations appears to be that wives feel they are doomed to a lonely day in the home while hubby is off to another gay gallop at the office. The husbands, on the other hand, don't intend to be thoughtless. They simply aren't awake yet. No man ever really comes to his full senses before noon.

But if a fellow can do his work at the office while half-asleep there is no reason why he can't train himself to give his wife a convincing goodbye in the same condition before leaving home. It just takes a little training. Look at a horse—he can sleep standing up.

The first thing to decide is what kind of a goodbye will really impress your wife. Then practice doing it until it becomes automatic. Young wives like the robust romantic touch. If you have one of those, simply wipe the egg from your mouth, bend her backward over the breakfast table, kiss her fervently and murmur—"Till dusk."

Naturally the spinal column of middle-aged wives might crack under this treatment—or your own might, if you are a middle-aged husband. Perhaps, if you fall to this category, it would be simpler merely to grab both her hands and say "goodnight." She wouldn't be so sure you were kidding.

New York, April 30 (AP)—How to say goodbye to your wife in the morning?

More and more thoughtful Americans believe this is the crucial matrimonial problem of modern times. At least I sometimes get the impression after listening to wives discuss the subject.

All agree that their husbands, thoughtful though they may be on other occasions, have neglected the art of delivering the daily farewell.

"My husband is in a fog from the time he gets up until he goes out the door," one wife complained. "Sometimes I wish he would even beat me—anything to show he realized I am alive."

Another wife objected to the peck on the cheek her mate gave her enroute to his coat and hat. "There is no greater insult than an absent-minded kiss," she affirmed.

The Seminole Indian tribe was formed in the 18th Century when a group split away from the Creek tribe.

There's something for everybody in Paris fashions this Spring. For the practical woman, there's the Pierre Balmain's gray worsted suit (left) piped in white pique, worn with white hat and parasol. Then, for the sophisticated woman, Balmain plunges the neckline to a new low (center) in a white lace dress embroidered in pale green, blue and orange sequins. Coat is white with pink cuffs. For the very young woman who likes simple lines with a flair, Margy Rouff combines (right) a pleated white linen dress with a bright green felt capelet trimmed with white snowflakes.

DOROTHY DIX

It Can Work

Dear Miss Dix: Is there nothing to be said in favor of a widow's mother living with a married daughter? Judging from the attitude taken by most people toward this question, one would think it nothing short of criminal.

I was a widow when my only daughter married several years ago and went quite a distance away to live. My life was very busy at the time, as I took my aged parents into my home and cared for them until they died. Now I maintain my home and derive some income from it, but it is both a physical and financial struggle for me.

On the other hand, my daughter, who is very happily married, is quite fed up with four children. She has no outside help except for an occasional baby-sitter. We could use a help to one another. If I sold my home and went to live with them (and they assure me there is always a room waiting for me) the financial sacrifices would all be on my side. And perhaps I should not be doing that at the age of 60. I would not be dependent upon them entirely. I do feel, however, that life is too short to be away from those we love, but I would never want to bring discord into their home.

A. S. M.
 Answer: There is a very great deal to be said in favor of a mother living with a daughter, and about the only thing against it is simple human cussedness. Few people are willing to make the adjustments necessary to a workable solution of the problem. From the facts you present, and granting that your daughter and son-in-law are as intelligent and thoughtful as you, the combined family should be an outstanding success. Your daughter could certainly use your assistance in understanding mother, and you are too wise to inflict unsought advice, or to try to monopolize her time or attention.

Be Willing To Compromise

The reason most three-sided households are not successful is that one, at least, of its members is too demanding, too unwilling to compromise. Mother considers that she still holds authority over her daughter, or that the young people should never go out without her, or entertain company by themselves. Daughters, all too frequently, think she can have an unhampered social life because grandma is around to take care of the youngsters. Son-in-law resents every move Mom makes and refers to her, even before the children, as a battle-ax.

No house hold can endure in harmony with so many conflicts.

But what a small job of readjusting will do! Mother takes her place as the third member of the family with no resentment. After all, she had her day of authority and it is only right that the reins of government should now be placed in younger hands. The young couple defers to her as a matter of good manners, and a result of good upbringing. The grandchildren are taught to do the same. Daughter is glad to have the assistance of another pair of hands, but doesn't try to inflict a burdensome share of the work onto the older woman. Son-in-law, too, is happy to see his wife less harassed and with more time to go out with him. Why can't it work out?

If you do go to live with your daughter, don't give up all your own activities. Don't become entirely dependent on your daughter and her family for amusement or entertainment. Take an occasional vacation by yourself, or with friends. Getting away once in a while, will give you a chance to keep your perspective and independence, and give your family a chance to miss you. Best of luck to a very wise and sensible woman!

Dear Miss Dix: I'm going steady with a girl who has a bad habit of acting up all the time. I've threatened to break with her if she doesn't stop, but I know I'm too much in love to carry out my threat. What can I do with her?

K. K.
 Answer: Read "The Taming of the Shrew." Will Shakespeare had methods of handling headstrong women that are wise to this day. If you marry the girl and let her continue to rule your life with her tantrums, you're in for a sorry fate. No matter how deep your love, it won't last under such adverse conditions. Either reform her now or give her up!

Dear Miss Dix: I'm 25, about to be married, and have just one major worry. When I was quite young, my gums became infected and it was necessary for me to have all my teeth extracted. I'm terribly self-conscious about this handicap, and have never let anyone know of it. My fiancé of course doesn't know, and I'm afraid to tell him he'll call off the wedding. Do you think I could conceal my affliction when we're married?

WILMA
 Answer: I don't advise trying of affection are, I know, what a girl in love craves most. But also, they are what most men hate to make. A man feels that if he has once asserted his love, it can safely be taken for granted from that point on. And the one thing a woman never takes for granted is her beloved's devotion. It's just a case of a woman's sentimental nature contrasted with a man's practical one.

Devotion Good Substitute

You rightly assume that if you don't hear the three magical words now, you won't hear them after the wedding. As a substitute you will have day-by-day devotion affection and consideration. You'll just have to learn to make them do. A husband who doesn't make constant verbal declarations of love shows his feelings with loyalty and fidelity, is surely to be preferred to the man who violently asserts his love, then stays out every night spending his salary on himself.

A reasonable man should realize how much importance women place on such seemingly small things, and make an effort to please them by saying the sweet nothings, making the affectionate gestures that spell romance. Why they are so dense is one of life's mysteries. Until a magic formula is devised to turn every man into a hard-working, domesticated husband with just the proper dash of Don Juan, wives of unromantic males will have to be satisfied with the crumbs of demonstrative love.

Your fiancé is apparently one of those strong silent men who can be a considerable problem. Learn early when it's safe to ask questions, and when it's better to be silent. Respect his silent moods, but don't overlook surliness or sulkiness. Diplomatic handling is called for in dealing with self-contained people. They are well worth the trouble, however, as they're greatly to be preferred to the nagging, haggling, overcurious type.

Dear Miss Dix: I have been accused of not having a sense of humor, but do you think it's funny of my mother-in-law to tell our little boy that I am not his mother and that he doesn't have to mind me? She is always saying things like that to him and the child is getting very confused. If I complain, she tells my husband she's only joking. The he becomes angry.

C of C Entertains State Laymakers

Washington, April 30 (AP)—Arkansas' Chamber of Commerce entertained members of the state congressional delegation at a dinner here last night.

The "Arkansas Chamber," headed by Dr. Joe T. Rushon, sponsored the dinner. Several delegations from Arkansas are here for the annual meeting of the National Chamber of Commerce.

with me and says I shouldn't tell her so seriously.

Answer: Your mother-in-law's sense of humor verges on the macabre. Anyone with even a modicum of common sense knows that they are easily confused and all things, such as desperately important items as family life, are never the subjects of teasing. Someone should make your mother-in-law realize this or, if she can't, easily become a nervous, howled ed little boy. Your doctor would be a good person to do the talking perhaps, the next time you have occasion to take the child for treatment or a check-up you could discuss the matter.

Dear Miss Dix: Is it possible for older people really to fall in love? I know a woman who is apparently very much in love with a man she has known for years. She is a widow, he a widower. They are frequently in each other's company. Is friendship and companionship better for them, or would it be happier if they married?

Answers: What would be so presumptuous as to put an age limit on love? It stays late, different forms at different ages, or with different people, but falls like a mantle of love over all their lives.

The mutual devotion of older people is a perfect foundation for marriage. It will prove just a deeper manifestation and extension of the present friendship.
